

Wired Magazine: "Watch People with Accents Confuse the Hell Out of AI Assistants"

The screenshot shows the Wired Magazine website interface. At the top, the Wired logo is on the left, the article title "Watch People With Accents Confuse the Hell Out of AI Assistants" is in the center, and a "SUBSCRIBE" button with a magnifying glass icon is on the right. Below the header is a navigation bar with categories: BUSINESS, CULTURE, DESIGN, GEAR, SCIENCE, SECURITY, and TRANSPORTATION. The main content area features a video player with a woman sitting and the text "ACCENT:GERMAN" overlaid. To the left of the video is a "SHARE" section with icons for Facebook (SHARE 1653), Twitter (TWEET), Comment, and Email. Below the video, the article text begins with "IF YOU'VE SPENT any time barking at your virtual assistant, you've no doubt had the conversation run aground a few times. 'No, Siri, I said 'Play Prince Purple Rain,' not 'Belay price Urkle T-pain.'" and continues with "But while Siri, Alexa, and Google may sometimes have a". To the right of the main content is a "MOST POPULAR" section with two items: "AUTONOMOUS VEHICLES Uber's Culture Problems Could Sink Its Self-Driving Future" by AARIAN MARSHALL, and "PODCASTS Apple's New Transparency Is Huge for Podcasts". At the bottom left of the screenshot, there is a small error message: "Waiting for securepubads.g.doubleclick.net..."

<https://www.wired.com/2017/05/ai-assistants-accented-english>

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gNx0huL9qsQ>

Verification Date: 06/13/2017